Health Care Regulatory Practice

Our attorneys are experienced in assisting hospitals, physicians, physician groups, and other health care providers in navigating the complex regulatory scheme associated with today's health care market. Several of our health care attorneys are former Assistant Attorneys General and/or General Counsel of state agencies who have represented both the regulator and the regulated entity. Their unique perspective can prove invaluable when clients make strategic decisions in the regulatory context.

We regularly represent health care providers before federal and state agencies, county authorities, local health districts, and accreditation bodies, including the Joint Commission and the Community Health Accreditation Program (CHAP). We also participate in the regulatory rule-making process from the ground up, so that our clients can understand what is important to the regulator, and why. This knowledge frequently is helpful in resolving disputes with regulatory bodies.
