Rex is a partner in the Vorys Columbus office and a member of the technology and intellectual property group. His practice is focused on protection of intellectual property rights through patents, trademarks and trade secrets. Rex has experience preparing and prosecuting U.S. and foreign patent and trademark applications. His experience also includes freedom to operate analysis, patent post grant practice, counseling/portfolio management and contract negotiation. In addition, Rex assists clients with advertising agreements and he has significant litigation representing accused infringers in the defense of patent, trademark and copyright claims.

His notable experience includes:

- Preparing multiple petitions for inter partes review
- Reviewing and structuring digital and traditional advertising contracts
- Analyzing asserted intellectual property for infringement and validity
- Identifying defenses and preparing summary judgments that resulted in the cancellation of a U.S. trademark registration
- Managing the intake and integration of a mid-sized patent and trademark portfolio, including the coordination of a worldwide assignment recordation project
- Filing and preparing of UDRP complaints to resolve instances of cyber-squatting for multiple clients

Rex has a technical background in electrical engineering and is experienced with multiple technologies including: electronics, telecommunications, software, consumer products, medical devices, rechargeable batteries, and steel manufacturing.

Prior to law school, Rex worked as an operations program manager for Teradyne, Inc., in Boston, Massachusetts.

Rex received his J.D. summa cum laude from The Ohio State University Moritz College of Law, where he served as the managing editor of the Ohio State Law Journal. He received his Master's in Business Administration from the Boston College Carroll School of Management and his Masters in Electrical Engineering from Cornell University College of Engineering. Rex received his B.S. from Cornell University.
