Vorys is proud to announce that Pamela A. Bresnahan, a partner in the firm's Washington, D.C. office, has been named to Washingtonian's 2013 list of the best lawyers in the Washington metro area. Bresnahan was recognized as one of the area's top civil-defense attorneys. She has been included on the annual list each year since 2011.

Washingtonian magazine's reporters and editors completed a comprehensive research process that included surveys, interviews and additional studies to determine which lawyers, from 30 legal practice areas, should be included on the list. Washingtonian's list represents the top one percent of the area's 80,000 attorneys.

Bresnahan is the head of the litigation practice group in the Vorys Washington, D.C. office. She serves as trial and appellate counsel in business and commercial litigation matters, with an emphasis on directors and officers, professional liability defense and coverage litigation. Bresnahan represents financial institutions, lawyers, broker/dealers, financial professionals, directors and officers, fiduciaries and insurers. She also serves as coverage and litigation counsel for insurers issuing errors and omissions policies. Bresnahan represents businesses and individuals in securities, intellectual property and other corporate litigation. She advises law firms and lawyers on management issues and discipline matters.

Bresnahan is a fellow of the American College of Trial Lawyers
